

The North Vietnamese mounted a major resupply effort during the TET bombing pause, 8-11 February 1967. We estimate that during these four days from 15,000 to 20,000 tons of supplies were moved into the southern parts of North Vietnam for eventual onward movement into South Vietnam.

Remarks:
Dick: The figure of 25,000 tons has been noted in the press, apparently released by the military. The DIA official estimates have been just over 20,000 tons. I note that the 25,000 tons is related to a six day period rather than the actual four day bombing pause.
